ABOUT SEMINAR:

The global software industry and the software engineering academia are two large communities. However, unfortunately, the level of joint industry-academia collaborations in SE is still relatively very low, compared to the amount of activity in each of the two communities. It seems that the two 'camps' show only limited interest/motivation to collaborate with one other. Many researchers and practitioners have written about the challenges, success patterns (what to do, i.e., how to collaborate) and anti-patterns (what not to do) for industry-academia collaborations

ABOUT SEMINAR:

Entrepreneurship and innovation are increasingly important in all areas of business and government. Entrepreneurial start-ups galvanize the economy by identifying new opportunities and redirecting resources to them.

Established firms innovate in order to outmaneuver or respond to their competition. And in the public sector, the need for effective policies to deal with new challenges and for increasing service delivery with declining budgets also places a premium on innovative thinking.

The seminar focuses on the skills necessary for the planning, development and launch of entrepreneurial and innovative ventures.

ABOUT SEMINAR:

Industry-academia collaboration has become a subject of great interest to academics, industry leaders and policymakers, as it is now acknowledged that such relationships are valuable for innovation. The aim of the study reported here is to explore collaboration trends over time in the field of membrane use for water treatment by carrying out bibliometric analysis of scientific publications related to the field. It is part of a broader project looking at factors that influence industry-academia collaborative research in the water sector. Thousand six hundred and seventy eight papers from eight journals from the years 1967 to 2001 were analysed for co-authorship patterns. Thousand three hundred and seventy papers from the last decade were examined for a snapshot view of inter-institutional, cross-disciplinary, industry-academic and international collaboration trends. Results show that the field is highly collaborative with the majority (87%) of papers involving two or more authors. In terms of industry-academic collaboration, there was an increase in the number of papers from 1994 onwards, and a very high proportion (91%) were cross-disciplinary.

Summary Of Innovation trends and industry, Academia & collaboration

Venue: - Seminar Hall, Malla Reddy College of Engineering

Dated:- 21st & 22nd March 2017

Attendees:- 75 Members from Industry, Academia, MSME and individual entrepreneurs

Anamika Chourasia, Head of Professional Services, South Asia, IP & Science, Thomson Reuters-states that Innovation is widely recognized as one of the key focus areas of Corporate, Academia and Government (A&G) segments alike even though the reasons to innovate might vary. Each segment has strengths – strong basic research and research publication output are hallmarks of Academia whereas the Corporate segment is strong in applied research and subsequent innovation and commercialization. For a sustainable and successful innovation ecosystem, collaboration between the various segments is critical as evidenced by increasing initiatives to bolster such collaboration.
