MOU

A memorandum of understanding (MOU) is a formal agreement that outlines plans for a common line of action between two or more parties. An MOU is used when companies plan to work together or partner on a project or similar venture. In government, these agreements are used to coordinate interagency work.

MOUs are usually not legally binding and are less formal documents than a more-binding contract. However, they are taken seriously in business transactions. MOUs are stronger than a gentlemen's agreement or a handshake. They are often the first steps companies take toward a legal contract.

The AICTE taken an initiative to linkup the Industry with Acadmic institute to fill the gap between industry and academia, and MRCE institute said that the college is committed to provide state of the art technologies and facilities to the students in collaboration with industries to make them better and employable engineers.
