SESSION IV: 29th July 2025: Time: 1.30 PM to 3.30 PM

Before the technical session began, Mr. K. Shankar, Assistant Professor of EEE, introduced the resource persons by reading their academic and experience profiles.

Case studies demonstrated a software interface. The workflow is triggered by "When chat message received," which then feeds into an "AI Agent." The AI agent interacts with an "OpenAI Chat Model," a "Simple Memory" block, and a "Send a message in Gmail" block.

"The session concluded with AI- IoT emerging technologies across various domains": This highlights the main theme and outcome of the event. It indicates that the discussion focused on the growing importance of AI and the Internet of Things (IoT) in different fields.

"Interaction and queries with resource persons": This is a crucial element of such events. It means the participants had an opportunity to engage directly with the experts or speakers (the "resource persons"). This interaction likely involved asking questions, clarifying doubts, and discussing the topics in more detail. This is often the most valuable part of a session, as it allows for a deeper understanding and a more personalized learning experience.

The FDP officially came to a close with a vote of thanks, delivered by Mrs. K. Navya, Assistant Professor of EEE. In her address, she extended gratitude to everyone who contributed to the success of the program, including the resource persons for their expertise, the participants for their active engagement, and the management for their support in making the FDP a "grand success."

Key Takeaways

Foundational Knowledge: Participants gained a core understanding of AI and IoT concepts.

Specific Applications: The program covered practical uses of AI for energy management in smart buildings.

Broad Exploration: The FDP highlighted current and emerging applications of AI-IoT across various engineering fields.

Technical Skills: Specialized topics included using AI for renewable energy forecasting and battery management systems.

Practical Motivation: Participants were inspired to apply their knowledge by building a decision tree model to detect faults using simulated data.

Feedback & Outcome

Participants highly praised the FDP, commending the depth and clarity of the content. The program successfully achieved its objectives of academic enrichment and networking among attendees. All participants who provided feedback received e-certificates, formally recognizing their completion. This positive outcome confirms the program's success and effective delivery.

Conclusion

The FDP was a grand success in terms of participation, knowledge dissemination, and academic engagement. It underscored the relevance of AI-IoT in the evolving landscape of electrical engineering applications and motivated faculty members to explore interdisciplinary research.
